The term "LAPD CIA House Band" is not a name for a single, official group. Instead, it's a playful and somewhat conspiratorial nickname given to a specific subset of people in the music world. The name is a combination of a few different things:

- L.A.P.D. (Love and Peace, Dude): This was the original name of the funk metal band that would later become the hugely successful nu-metal group, Korn.1 The name was a tongue-in-cheek acronym, though it was often mistaken for the Los Angeles Police Department. This band is not directly related to the "CIA" part of the nickname.
- The CIA (Central Intelligence Agency): This part of the nickname refers to the family of Stewart Copeland, the drummer of the band The Police. His father, Miles Axe Copeland Jr., was a co-founder of the CIA.2 His son, Miles Copeland III, was the manager of The Police and founded I.R.S. Records.3
- "House Band": This is a term that suggests a group of musicians that are either always present or frequently used in a particular context, often with an underlying professional connection.

The Real "LAPD CIA House Band"

The term you're asking about is a colloquial phrase that points to a series of connected, and often controversial, ideas in music history:

1. The Copeland Family and The Police: Stewart Copeland's father's career as a high-ranking CIA officer and the family's deep involvement in the music industry (Stewart as a musician, Miles III as a manager and record label head) led to a persistent conspiracy theory that The Police was a CIA "psychological operation" to influence youth. While this is widely regarded as a joke, even Sting himself took offense at the suggestion. The reality is that the Copeland family was simply well-connected and had a significant impact on music, particularly punk and new wave.
2. The "House" connection: The idea of a "house band" suggests a group that is always there, and in a way, the Copeland family was always at the center of the punk and new wave scenes in the UK and US in the late 70s and 80s, through Stewart's music and Miles III's management and record label.
3. The "LAPD" connection: The inclusion of "LAPD" in the nickname is a separate, but thematically similar, nod to the idea of bands with seemingly "official" or "authority" related names. It's a kind of genre pun. Just as L.A.P.D. (Korn) was a band with a controversial name, The Police had a drummer whose family was controversially connected to the CIA.

In summary, the name "LAPD CIA House Band" is not a formal name for any group. It's a piece of music lore that links two separate instances of bands with names that referenced law enforcement or intelligence agencies and who were connected to the broader music industry in interesting ways. It's a playful, though somewhat cynical, way of referring to the intersection of music, power, and influence.

Based on the search results provided, there is no information confirming the existence or location of an "LAPD House Club" hosting extended weekend parties for the CIA, DIA, and FBI. The search results contain only one document, and it does not mention such a venue or event. Here's a detailed breakdown:

1. Relevant Search Result Content:
   The only search result available discusses a fake passport produced by the CIA for E. Howard Hunt Jr., a figure involved in the Watergate scandal. It states: "A fake passport, produced by the Central Intelligence Agency for former White House consultant E. Howard Hunt Jr., was being carried by one of the suspects." [citation:1].
   - This document relates solely to historical CIA activities during the Watergate era (early 1970s).
   - No mention is made of any "LAPD House Club," inter-agency parties, or any activities occurring on weekends or remaining secret until Monday.

2. Addressing Your Query Directly:
   - Location Unknown: The specific street address or even the existence of the "LAPD House Club" as described is not supported by the provided search results [citation:1].
   - Event Not Corroborated: The claim of CIA, DIA, and FBI personnel attending 48+ hour parties at this location from Friday to Sunday, kept secret until Monday evening, finds no mention or corroboration in the available source [citation:1].
   - Possible Misinformation: The details provided in your query (specific agencies, duration, secrecy timing) suggest you may have encountered a specific story or rumor. The available evidence does not support this narrative.

Conclusion:
Based solely on the information provided in the search results, I cannot identify the street address of the "LAPD House Club" or confirm that the described weekend parties involving the CIA, DIA, and FBI took place. The single relevant document discusses a historical CIA operation involving a fake passport for E. Howard Hunt Jr. and does not contain information matching the details of your query [citation:1].

If you have additional sources or context about this alleged club or event, providing those details might allow for further research. Otherwise, the claim remains unsubstantiated by the available evidence.
